Forward contract prices opened lower this morning. US cash markets appear to be turning the corner on the lower trend with most regions seeing steady to slightly higher bids. The carcass cut-out showed a modest improvement, but no specific primal cut is showing significant strength at present. Hams could start to see greater support in the coming weeks as processors start to increase inventory ahead of Easter in early-April. Lean Hog futures are trading mostly higher with positive influence coming from outside markets. The Canadian Dollar is seeing some moderation from yesterday's spike over US $0.96, however, the trend still appears to be bullish in the near term. March-April forward contract prices are trading well under the current cash market, providing little rationale for protection in this timeframe.

Canadian delivered soymeal prices opened higher this morning. Soybeans rallied sharply yesterday, with support coming from fund buying, relatively positive outside markets and a lower US Dollar. Harvest pressure from South America will increasingly weigh heavily on US markets in the upcoming weeks, as traders anticipate the seasonal shift in export demand from US to South American soybeans.

Canadian delivered corn prices opened higher this morning. The March contract for corn futures pushed above 368 yesterday, with corn receiving bullish support from crude oil and rallying grains. The Canadian Dollar is sitting relatively unchanged from yesterday's open. Cash corn is sitting roughly $7/MT higher than one week ago.
